[The following statistical study of our membership is reprinted from School and Society, of January 4, 1919.]

"In view of the fact that the American Association of University Professors held its annual meeting last week, it may be of interest not only to members, but also to others concerned about the organization of teachers in our higher and lower schools to know the distribution of the membership of the Association. Only institutions in which there are five or more members are included. The list itself has a certain value, for a standard group of our better institutions is often needed.

"The number of members of the Association refers to the beginning of 1918 and the number of teachers is from the report of the commissioner of education for 1914. A later list is not available; one not disturbed by war conditions may in any case be preferable. The table gives for each institution the number of members of the American Association of University Professors and the total number of professors and other teachers, followed by the per cent that members of the Association form of the whole teaching body. The editor of this journal is not responsible for the figures given by the Bureau of Education. They may be regarded as official, but they are not always arranged so as to be comparable.*

"The University of Wisconsin has the largest membership in the Association and thus maintains its reputation as an institution that has led in recent years in the promotion of research and in movements of social co-operation for the welfare of the community. It is the only institution having a membership exceeding one hundred. Other state universities having a membership in excess of 50 are: California 73, Michigan 65, Missouri 59, Ohio State 52. Among the private corporations, the University of Chicago, like Wisconsin among state universities, noted for its rise to distinction, leads with 97 members. It is followed by Columbia 86, Yale 78, Stanford 74, Princeton 73, Pennsylvania 71, Harvard 60, Cornell 58 and the Johns Hopkins 55.

"Among colleges those having the largest membership are: Smith 50, Dartmouth 40, Mount Holyoke 38, Wellesley 36, Vassar 32, College of the City of New York 27, Amherst 24, Bryn Mawr 17, Tufts 13, Williams 12, Swarthmore 11, Union 11. The colleges for women have a notably large membership, traversing a common opinion that women do not readily organize to co-operate.

"The percentage of teachers in each institution who are members of the Association is more significant than the total membership. The comparisons are, however, more difficult. Smaller institutions, probably to their advantage, having relatively more professors and fewer instructors on their teaching staff. Large institutions have often professional schools somewhat loosely affiliated with them. The Association requires ten years of teaching for eligibility to membership. It is weak in the professional schools, whose professors are less likely to be interested in the general academic situation.

"Amherst thus leads in the percentage of its teaching body who are members of the Association, followed by Smith 41, Mount Holyoke 39, Princeton 36, Brown 35, Reed 35, Stanford 35, Dartmouth 33, Haverford 32, Union 31 and Vassar 30.

"Universities with more than 200 teachers have the following percentages among the members of the Association: Princeton 36, Stanford 35, Chicago 29, Missouri 27, Johns Hopkins 24, Wisconsin 20, Iowa State 20, Michigan 18, Columbia 17, Yale 17, Ohio State 16, Massachusetts Institute of Technology 16, California 16, Syracuse 14, Pennsylvania 13, College of the City of New York 13, Kansas 12, Harvard 12, Western Reserve 11, Northwestern 11, Nebraska 11, Cincinnati 11, Minnesota 10, Indiana 10, Illinois 8, Cornell 8, Pittsburgh 5, Tulane 5, New York University 2."
